

Building Emotional Self-Awareness

The goal of this exercise is to expand your ability to name your emotions. A good emotional "vocabulary" and steady self-reflection will help you become more conscious of your emotions. You cannot develop empathy for other people's feelings until you understand your own! You also cannot effectively manage emotions you are not aware of!

At least once each day for a month keep a journal where you write down the emotions you felt that day. Most of us have MANY different emotions during a day.

You can use the sample worksheet at the end of this document if you like...just make copies so you have one page for each day.

Remember: This first step is just to strengthen your emotional self-awareness. Don't worry about WHY you have the feelings. And especially don't worry about how to "make them go away" or "fix them"! Just notice them.

Worksheet instructions:

- list as many emotions as you can describe
- don't worry if they seem to contradict each other...that is normal (we can be sad and happy at the same time)
- notice over the course of a day if there is a lot of variation, or if you are repeating one feeling over and over
- if you are repeating one word over and over, try to go "below" that feeling if you are repeatedly saying "I am angry" try to determine why by asking "Why am I angry?" at least 5 times. For example: "I am angry because my boss yelled at me. Why does that make me angry? Because I feel disrespected. Why does that make me angry? Because I am a human being and I deserve to be treated with dignity and kindness. Why does lack of kindness make me angry? Because too many people in my life treat me that way..." (Hopefully you get the idea...go until you can't go anymore even if that is 8 or 9 or 10 "Why's")
- Once you ask "Why?" 5 or more times, look at the list of words again. You might be able to add another word to describe your feelings. Maybe you are angry AND sad...or angry AND scared.
- Please consult a qualified therapist or counselor if you find that you have persistent feelings of sadness, anger or thoughts which scare you.
